

CANCER IS HAPPENING RIGHT NOW

We're working to beat it right now. Help us find cures and kinder treatments today.

Donate right now

Thank you – from Mrs Lee

Last year, on 25th August, I was told I had cancer. It's a moment I will remember for the rest of my life. It is a moment that changes everything – it changes your plans, it changes decisions you make, it changes places you go, and it changes what feels important. I've probably never hugged my children as tightly as I did that night. It was the start of a long journey for me – and for my family and friends. Some of that journey was horrible, painful, upsetting, frightening... but it was also a very special time. People surrounded us, looked after us and loved us. Knowing people care like that is a complete privilege... one which I would probably never have known had I not had cancer.

For me, there was good news - and I am grateful for that every single day. I can only try to show that by trying to be a better person (which, sadly, I don't manage most days!). For some people, the ending is very different.

Cancer Research UK work continuously to get to the day when everyone diagnosed with cancer has a happy ending. They can't do anything without funding...

CANCER
RESEARCH
UK

My commitment:

On Sunday, I'll be running the Birmingham Marathon (26.2 miles) to raise money for Cancer Research UK.

Your commitment (please):

- wear non-uniform on Friday - (£2 NO caps or cropped tops – appropriate)
- buy cakes
- eat cakes

